COYOTE

Canis latrans

ON FEBRUARY 8, 1995 A 29-POUND FEMALE COYOTE WANDERED ONTO THE MAJOR DEEGAN EXPRESSWAY IN VAN CORTLANDT PARK. THIS WAS THE FIRST CONFIRMED COYOTE SIGHTING IN NEW YORK CITY SINCE 1946. DUE TO THE VIRTUAL EXTINCTION OF THE GRAY WOLF (CANIS LUPUS) IN EASTERN NORTH AMERICA, THE WESTERN COYOTE EXTENDED ITS RANGE TO AREAS NORTH AND WEST OF NEW YORK CITY.

GOWANUS SWIMMERS ARRESTED.

Thomas Muldary, of 245 Bond street, went swimming yesterday afternoon in Gowanus Canal, unadorned by bathing attire. He was arrested by Officer Storey and locked up in the Third Precinct Station House. Charles Wessol, of 298 Eleventh street, was arrested by Sergeant Kirby, of the Eighth sub-Precinct, for a similar offense. He was bathing in Gowanus Bay, at the foot of Fifty-fifth street. He was fined $3.

FORT GREENE IS A NEIGHBORHOOD WITH UNUSUALLY CONSISTENT 19TH CENTURY DOMESTIC ARCHITECTURE DEVELOPED PRINCIPALLY IN THE SHORT SPAN BETWEEN 1855 AND 1875. FORT GREENE PARK WAS CREATED IN 1848 AT THE INSTIGATION OF POET WALT WHITMAN, WHO WAS THEN THE EDITOR OF THE BROOKLYN DAILY EAGLE NEWSPAPER. IT WAS REDESIGNED IN 1867 BY FREDERICK LAW OLMSTEAD AND CALVERT VAUX, LANDSCAPE ARCHITECTS OF CENTRAL PARK AND PROSPECT PARK. THE PARK CONTAINS THE PRISON SHIP “MARTYRS’ MONUMENT,” AND THE SYMBOLIC TOMB OF 11,500 MEN WHO DIED IN THE REVOLUTIONARY WAR ON BRITISH PRISON SHIPS ANCHORED NEARBY.

The term “terrarium” refers to a glass enclosure used for sustaining plant and animal life in an unnatural atmosphere—most often indoors. Although intending to reproduce a natural environment, these terrariums are a far cry from the fields and forests of the countryside. Instead, they are isolated, veritably existing in an artificial world of in-betweens.

Those narrow, winding streets, edged by skyscrapers forming the famous Wall Street canyons, follow the pattern laid out by Colonial predecessors three centuries ago. Beaver Street, Mill Lane, Marketfield Street, Pearl Street and a dozen more conform the plan illustrated in the city's earliest maps.

Built between 1837 and 1842, the Croton Aqueduct profoundly changed New York City by providing abundant clean water from the Croton River in northern Westchester County. Local wells, springs and ponds had gradually become polluted from lack of sewers and the unchecked growth of industry. Investing in a new water supply system became a priority after a devastating cholera epidemic in 1832 and the Great Fire of 1835.

Food shortages, Civil War draft laws, repression of demonstrations, and homeless evictions have caused rioting in Tompkins Square Park during its 184-year history. But its American Elms have withstood it all, including the tree that overlooked the USA's first Hare Krishna chanting in 1966. Explore this once-troubled park from its ancient elms to its monument to the sinking of the General Slocum, NYC's greatest human disaster before 9/11.

On Monday, July 17, Summerhill, a “boozy sandwich shop” that popped up in Crown Heights, issued a press release to several New York publications, which can be found in full on NY.Eater.com. The PR alluded to bullet hole-ridden walls and highlighted 40 ounce bottles of rosé, which were joked to be served in paper bags—essentially with the aim of profiting from black pain and a history of neglect and disinvestment in this historically Afro-Caribbean and Orthodox Jewish neighborhood.

On Saturday, July 22, residents of Crown Heights convened an open forum, inviting Brennan to hear the voices of the community and respond to their concerns. She refused to show up, instead hiring a public relations firm while she mixed cocktails and engaged with the few people supporting her business from inside. Due to her refusal to negotiate in good faith, we now call on all residents to BOYCOTT INDEFINITELY and spread the word to SHUT SUMMERHILL DOWN.

BEATTIE SQUARE
.012 ACRE

Beattie Square is named in memory of Joseph S. Beattie, who lived at 247 Schenectady Avenue in Brooklyn. Beattie served as a Private in Company G of the 305th Infantry in the United States Army in World War I and reportedly died from wounds in France on October 5, 1918, a month before armistice.

Beattie Square is one of the oldest public parks in Brooklyn. Anton and Mary Vigelius deeded it to the City of Brooklyn in 1884 for one dollar on the condition that “the same shall be enclosed with an iron fence and forever kept as a public park or place.” In 1898, when Brooklyn was incorporated into the City of New York, the deed was transferred and came under the jurisdiction of Parks. At the insistence of the Beattie VFW Post, Beattie Square was named by local law in February 1st, 1921.

This woodchip-lined park, which faces the neo-classical Urban Sports and Cultural Center, lies along the boundary of Bushwick and Bedford-Stuyvesant Bushwick, one of the original six towns of Brooklyn, comes from the Dutch word “boswijck,” meaning “town in the woods.” Chartered by Director General of New Netherland Peter Stuyvesant in 1661, Bushwick was settled in the 19th century by tobacco and grain farmers from France, Scandinavia, England, and Holland. By the mid-1800s, Bushwick boasted 11 breweries on a 14-block stretch known as “Brewer’s Row.”

WILLIAMSBRIDGE SQUARE

1.395 acres

The name of this site comes from a bridge across the Bronx River that was named for John Williams. In the 18th century, Williams had a farm on the east bank of the Bronx River in the vicinity of Gun Hill Road and White Plains Road. Some credit him with building the first Bronx River crossing. Though the story remains unproven, his farm was closest to the earliest span, and by the 19th century the bridge and surrounding community became known as Williamsbridge. The neighborhood has also been called Norwood, after an 1889 real estate development.

HOLCOMBE RUCKER PARK 3.05 ACRES

Holcombe Rucker (1926–1965) is remembered here for the major basketball tournaments he founded at this court, and for the the generations of players that emerged under his wing. Born and raised in Manhattan and schooled at Benjamin Franklin High School, Rucker worked between 1948 and 1964 as a Playground Director for NYC Parks at various Harlem playgrounds. Rucker's main purpose was to train local kids so that they could better compete on the court and in life.

His career flourished at this playground. Rucker's tournaments became summertime rituals and drew upon the talent in the neighborhood. Under his guidance, young local players cut their teeth on some of the most acrobatic streetball of their time. The game of streetball—a rougher and often faster version of basketball played outdoors—gained currency here because Rucker's tournaments combined the skills of both streetball and professional indoor basketball.

Rucker's motto on the court was “each one, teach one,” which stressed the importance of passing on what you learn to your neighbor. Rucker emphasized not only physical skill and discipline on the court, but education as a necessary partner to recreation. Rucker himself taught the players reading fundamentals, graded their homework, and let success on the report cards influence who would get to play. By the 1950s, Rucker had started the “Rucker Tournament,” out of which came some 700 college athletic scholarships.

Rucker continued his own education with a degree from City College of New York in 1962, and then taught English classes at Frederick Douglass J.H.S. 139. Rucker continued to build on the accomplishments of his students when he organized a tournament amongst his best amateur players and the professionals of that era. Such legends as Wilt Chamberlain and Kareem Abdul Jabbar came out to play.

COMMUNISTS, SOCIAL DEMOCRATS, TRADE UNIONISTS, LIBERAL DEMOCRATS AND EVEN CONSERVATIVE POLITICAL OPPONENTS OF THE NAZI REGIME WERE MARKED BY THE RED TRIANGLES THEY HAD TO WEAR. TENS OF THOUSANDS OF PEOPLE WHO THE GERMANS BELIEVED WERE ENGAGING IN POLITICAL OPPOSITION TO GERMAN RULE IN OCCUPIED EUROPE WERE INCARCERATED IN THE CAMPS. LESBIANS, ALCOHOLICS, HOMELESS PEOPLE AND OTHERS WERE DEEMED ASOCIALS AND WERE FORCED TO WEAR BLACK TRIANGLES IN THE CONCENTRATION CAMPS. THEY WERE SUBJECTED TO FORCED MANUAL LABOR, JUSTIFIED BY THE NAZIS AS REEDUCATION TO INSTILL PROPER SOCIAL HABITS AND PERSONAL DISCIPLINE.

“From the ‘Slave Galleries’ you’re invisible. You can see, but you can’t be seen. Black people, free and enslaved, were forced to sit in hidden, cramped rooms above the balcony of our church. Today, we are one of the largest African American congregations in the Lower East Side, but with the neighborhood changing, succeeding generations might not become aware of our history. Restoring the Slave Galleries not only preserves our Greek Revival building, but also the memory of slavery in American history and evidence of our important place in the community. If the Slave Galleries become invisible, history will become invisible too.”

0.39 ACRE

The Sheepshead Bay area experienced great economic growth at the turn of the 20th century. Following the success of the Sheepshead Bay Racetrack (1880–1915), located between Nostrand Avenue and Knapp Street, the Whitney family purchased it and converted it into the Sheepshead Bay Speedway (1915–1919). Although very successful, Henry Paine Whitney (1872–1930) sold the track in 1919 to the Joseph Day Real Estate Company to pay off gambling debts. The Real Estate Company then subdivided the area and sold parcels to various contractors who developed housing between 1919 and 1922. The developers named their streets for themselves. This street and playground was named for a developer named Haring.

The earliest playgrounds, called “sand gardens,” appeared in the 1880s on the grounds of settlement houses. Furnished with innovative play equipment like see-saws, and staffed by trained recreation specialists, the playground was designed to be a “healthful influence upon morals and conduct.” As Theodore Roosevelt, Honorary President of the Playground Association of America and the country’s future President wrote: “If we would have our citizens contented and law-abiding, we must not sow the seeds of discontent in childhood by denying children their birthright of play.” For civic reformers such as Roosevelt, recreation was not an end in itself: it was directly linked to the preservation of social morality. In 1903, the first municipally run playground in the United States, Seward Park, opened on the Lower East Side.

In the post-Depression 1930s, federal aid through the Works Progress Administration (WPA) enabled the City to expand and improve its play spaces. Under the strict stewardship of Parks Commissioner Robert Moses (1888–1981), new playgrounds were constructed at an astonishing rate throughout the decade. Moses was able to harness the massive manpower of Parks to add playgrounds and parks. In 1934, there were 119 playgrounds in the City; by 1960, there were 777.

The NYPD officers serving your community invite you to a discussion of the public safety challenges in our neighborhood.

With neighborhood policing, the Neighborhood
Coordination Officers (NCOs), and the Steady Sector Officers who work with them, have been given more time and opportunity to collaborate with residents in identifying and solving local quality of life conditions and crime concerns. The same officers are assigned to our community each day, so these officers learn the neighborhood, its challenges and potential, and the people who call it home.

This is a new way of doing business for the NYPD, and we need your help to make it work. We want to hear from a broad range of voices about what it will take to make all the residents of our neighborhood feel safe and secure.

The 17th century Dutch farming community of Harlem became the first fashionable New York suburb when the Harlem River Railroad opened in the latter part of the 19th century. Elegant townhouses were built for the well-to-do, while the less affluent were housed in tenements. The use of the elevator after 1900 allowed for the construction of luxurious apartment buildings.

But too much was built in an area which, in spite of the new Lenox Avenue Subway, was still considered too far away from Manhattan's center. So that buildings would not remain vacant, landlords reluctantly began to rent to Negroes. Forced out of the West Side By urban redevelopment, Blacks made Harlem their new home. Churches and other institutions followed their move uptown.

That hole was sealed up with a piece of the fallen World Trade Center. When it rains, rust from the piece of metal will drip down the rest of the cross, simulating a bleeding heart. The base of the cross includes a metal book with 35 pages listing the names of all the 9/11 Twin Towers victims. The names were etched in such a way that rubbings can be taken by visitors.

In the 1890s, this Bowery at Doyers Street corner was a gateway to the tiny but thriving Chinatown, even then a famed tourist destination. Squeezed between Bowery, Mott, Pell, and Doyers Streets and dominated by Chinese shops and residents, it was also a multi-ethnic enclave, like the nearby Five Points.

The local funeral parlor served both Irish and Chinese restaurants—unlike places uptown—welcomed African American diners.

Nicknamed the ‘Bloody Angle’, Doyers St was sometimes the scene of gangland battles, but primarily it was a place of culture and commerce, with famed artist Wong Kai Kee’s art store at 1 Doyers and the elegant Chinese-American Tuxedo Restaurant on the corner at 2 Bowery. The Chinese Theatre at 5–7 Doyers, which presented Chinese opera, was popular with locals and a must-see stop on Bowery/Chinatown “slumming tours.”

Noticeably absent were Chinese women. The discriminatory Chinese Exclusion Acts (1882–1943) severely restricted Chinese immigration and harshly limited the entry of Chinese women.

Thus Chinatown’s kinship associations became the center of Chinese American community life during these years. The Chinese Masonic Building at 22 Mott Street was where Dr. Sun Yat-sen raised funds for the 1911 overthrow of China's imperial government.

This building that Hank's is in was built in the 1880s by two Irish brothers and they opened the space as a bar in 190[could not read]. In the 1920s this neighborhood and this bar became home to Mohawk Indian Ironworkers who came to work on the NYC skyscrapers and bridges and ended up settling in Boreum Hill with their families. The local Steelworkers Union (Brooklyn Local 361) was located right up the street on Atlantic ave between 3rd and 4th and this Boreum Hill Community became known as Little Caughnawaga.

In 1936 the Works Progress Administration built an outdoor swimming pool at Hamilton Fish Park.
It was one of eleven pools constructed around the city that year. These new facilities opened during one of the hottest summers in history and in the middle of the Great Depression.
Thanks to the WPA pools, millions of New Yorkers got a place to swim.
In 1952 the U.S. Olympic Team used the Hamilton Fish pool for practice sessions on their way to Helsinki.

5G-enabled small cell antennas are a source of constant radio frequency microwave radiation (“wirelsss radiation”). Studies have shown that chronic exposure to this type of radiation can cause cancer, neurological problems and other serious health effects. This antenna will be emitting radiation whether nearby residents subscribe to the service or not. There is no way to turn it off.

Van Brunt St. Firehouse

This firehouse at 199 Van Brunt St. was the permanent home of Red Hook's first all-paid unit of the Brooklyn Fire Department.

(Between 1797 and 1869, Brooklyn's fire department was a volunteer force.)

Strategically located in a growing manufacturing district near NY Harbor's bustling docks and Atlantic Basin, the new two-bay, two-story brick firehouse opened in 1872 with Engine Company No. 2 in one bay and Ladder Company No. 1 in the other. This unique "double house" with a wall down the middle was designed to accommodate apparatus, several horses, and as many as 25 full-time firefighters who lived on the second floor.

Firemen typically worked a two-week tour of 24-hour days with one day off. They were permitted three one-hour breaks, a day to go home for meals, and pay was about $800 a year or 10¢ an hour. A busy company would respond to as many as 100 runs a year.

In 1960, Engine Company No. 2 and Ladder

Company No. 1, by then re-numbered Engine Company No. 202 and Ladder Company No.
101, relocated to their current home, one block east on Richards and Seabring St.

Around twenty thousand years ago, New York was buried beneath massive glaciers. When the ice receded, it left behind the characteristic sketch of Van Cortlandt Park—steep ridges, smooth hillsides, and open flats—and exposed its three major rock components: Fordham Gneiss, Inwood Dolomite, and Manhattan Schist. It took about seven thousand years across North America. By 1000 AD, Woodland Indians known as the Lenape began permanent settlements from lower New York State through Delaware. The Wiechquaskeck Lenapes occupied this site when, in 1639, the Dutch East India Company brought the first Europeans to settle in the Bronx. In 1646, Dutchman Adriaen Van Der Donck (1620–1655) became the first single owner of what is now Van Cortlandt Park. His vast estate “de Jonkeerslandt” gave Yonkers its name. The land passed through several families, each gradually developing it into viable farmland and a working plantation.

The Unisphere, located at the center of the radial pathways in the northern half of Flushing Meadows Corona Park, was commissioned for the New York World's Fair of 1964–65. Designed by landscape architect Gilmore D. Clarke (1892–1982) in aluminum with metallic mesh continents, the Unisphere was further refined in the stainless steel by industrial designers at Peter Muller-Munk Associates. American Bridge Company, a division of US Steel, engineered, fabricated and erected the 350-ton, 120-foot-diameter globe, which was the centerpiece and icon of the fair.

The sphere features representations of the continents and major mountain ranges in relief, and is encircled by three giant orbital rings that represent the tracks of early satellites. The capital cities of the world were marked by lights. The Unisphere celebrated both the dawn of the space age and the fair's broader theme of "Peace Through Understanding." It has since become a beloved symbol of Queens.
